The estimated revenue for 1889 was only £100,000.
The question concerning road rates was a grave

the question concerning special areas was a very difficult one to deal with in the administration of the present Act. The Minister for Lands had a right to claim for the lands of the colony what was known as their market value, but there was another consideration, and that was the settlement of the people on the land. It was far more desirable to settle these people on the land than to sell the land at high prices, to be afterwards locked up. The Colonial Treasurer had stated that the concessions granted to settlers in this colony were more liberal than the concessions given in Victoria; but this was not correct. He had always been opposed to the value put on land by the Government of this country. In fact he held that it was a fictitious value. (Hear, hear.) He could not see, however, any plan by which the Minister could give satisfaction under the present law. Mr. CHANTER believed that when that provision

...the proclamation of special areas was introduced into the Act it was the intention of the Legislature that it should apply only to the rich river districts—the Clarence, Richmond River, and other river districts. It was quite impossible for anyone to rear a family on 160 acres of land in the Murray District. That system had caused more trouble of late years in the minds of people desirous of taking up land than any other. He quoted a paragraph from the Dentist's Chronicle of January 3, announcing that

On 20th February, at the lands office, Deniliquin, portions 20 and 21, of 640 and 626 acres respectively, parish Whymouli, county Wakool, will be offered at public auction by the land agent. The lands referred to were h-d under conditional purchase and forfeited. They have been reserved twice, and afterwards proclaimed special areas. The area covers 1165 acres all adjoining, and is situated on the upper price is 3s. per acre. It is situated on and adjoining the western boundary of Barham pastoral holding, and south of Mr. S. L. Botcher's conditional

"The land is admirably adapted for agriculture," People had no opportunity to obtain land under these special areas, except by taking 160 acres. If, instead of this, the lands being offered in areas of 160 acres, they were offered in 640 and 625 acre blocks they would be selected. He thought the Minister might make such regulations as would compel the board to divide these lands into two or more portions. This system of procuring lands special areas tended to put a certain amount of money into the Treasury.

but it defeated altogether the intention of the Act. Special areas of 160 acres might do very well in some districts, but the system was never intended to apply to the Riverina district. There was no encouragement whatever given for settlement—quite the reverse. The best agriculturalists in the colony were the men who started with the least capital, and who added acre to acre until he found himself the possessor of a reasonable property. If the Minister had the slightest hope that, under the system of special

When the population of the country was being materially increased, he might be disillusioned at once. When the reserves were cancelled they were simply put up to auction in the ordinary course, and purchased at the reserve price fixed by the Government; and they simply aggregated large estates. The lands brought a paltry pound or two into the public coffers, but not for the reserves would they be utilised for agriculture. If the Minister would visit the New South Wales and Victorian sides of the river Murray, he would himself be

While that on the Victorian side supported a large population, while that on the New South Wales side was practically a sheepwalk. If hon. members wanted this state of things to continue, how could they possibly expect to see the colony prosper? He sincerely hoped that this question might be taken in hand at once.

Mr. HAYNES regarded the resolution proposed by the member for the Murray as a most important one, and he regretted that when an important question like his was being debated so little interest was taken in it but it was almost impossible to keep a quorum of members together. With regard to the Land Act, he would say that its success would to a large extent depend upon administration. Much could, no doubt, be done if the Land Act were administered with an honest desire to promote settlement, but that had not been the case. He had noticed in his district, with but one exception, that in every instance where reserves had been cancelled there had been called special areas, and taken by the large landholders." The present system might apply as regards some valuable lands along the coast, but it would never suit the Central Division and the Tiverina district. He trusted the Minister for Lands would see his way to amend the land law in the direction required by the spirit of the resolution. If a more general throwing open of the land in the colony suitable for agricultural settlement prevailed, there would follow a large influx of desirable settlers. In his own district one man was employed in agriculture.

Mr. GORMLEY said that every one in the country who had heard express any opinion at all on the overhauling of the Land Act was adverse to its special area provisions. If they were to be a prosperous people, additional facilities for settlement must be forthcoming. When an appeal was made to the country, his members would find that the country representatives would pronounce unmistakably against the present special area administration. More interest should be taken by the country members in the debate of such importance. When the Land Act of 1894 was passed, the special area clause was inserted to facilitate the taking up of land in the Western division of the colony. There was no other

those of securing permanent occupation, except under the special area clause. Still, they had seen that in many places where special areas had been proclaimed the land had been secured by the post office, and they or their agents had secured the land, so that other persons should be excluded. The land trusted the Nitinat for Lands would ascertain whether the land proclaimed as special areas was sufficient for the purpose to which it was supposed to be used. He was convinced that good results would be obtained in this way, in securing the country that settles.

Mr. VAUGHN pointed out that his experience led him to the conclusion that when special areas were thrown open for public competition the man with the longest purse obtained the land. An area of 160 acres was insufficient for any man to make a living out of, providing it were situated beyond a centre of population. The special area clause was supplying the industry which was the only one that could not obtain its own supply.

He was sorry that there was not a larger number of country members in the House to give a relief of the country feeling. However, he hoped the Minister for Lands would take the matter into his serious consideration, and refuse his consent to sell by auction so many of the ship reserves as had been sold during the past 19 months. He did not imply that the present Minister was to blame for all the trouble, as he believed his inclinations were in the direction of the land for the people. The conclusion of the session, he hoped, would be a happy one.

Mr. DAY maintained that no one should uphold the policy now carried out in the administration of the special area clause. It simply gave large landed proprietors the opportunity of obtaining adjoining properties. He was quite satisfied that the Minister for Lands would give due consideration to the people of the upland districts. He failed to see why they should have supreme consideration to the almighty dollar, rather than to the promotion of settlement. It would

Mr. BRUNNER said that the hon. member for Bulwer expressed surprise that he had not previously applied to some hon. member's remarks. Being new to the office, he thought his principal object should be to collect information from those experienced in the land business; to get all the information he possibly could to enable him to satisfactorily deal with the subject. With regard to the matter before the House, he claimed that no one, member nor any man in the country had a stronger desire to see profitable settlement upon the prairie than he had. (Hear, hear.) From his public utterances, it would be noticed that he had always maintained that principle. The land question was one that had puzzled many wiser and more intelligent men than he. The difficulty he experienced in his Department was not so much in settling differences between the squatter and selector as prevailing upon the speculative element from stepping in between the squatter and selector.

that was the difficulty prevailed, and one who considered the officer's most serious thought and consideration. His experience was that, in many cases had dropped up, and only short, still he wanted to make this statement, and to give to our members an assurance that this was the most serious difficulty arising in the Department. However desirous he might be to induce settlement he had to a large extent to depend upon the information which he obtained from the officers of the

that Mr. Barbour—who, perhaps, was as well versed in the land question as any hon. member—should ask the House to adopt so vague a motion as the one under notice. The making of the special areas was under the act of 1834, and the cou'd find in the doubt w no opposition from the hon. member when the matter was taken under discussion. (Hoar, hear.) Apart from the technicalities the hon. member must know that whatever might be the result of his motion, would have no very material effect so far as the law was concerned. With regard to the land in the interior, he believed the law of 1884 was a mistake, and that the special areas should be extended; but while the provision remained, he contended that the law of 1884, in giving the ministers power to make special areas, was wise, for the reason that there were lands of special value, and he was surprised to hear hon. members say that the measure was introduced for the purpose of dealing with the land of northern rivers. (Hear, hear.)

THE PRIZE EXHIBITION

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:

SIR,—The very successful meeting of John Young's excellent letter upon the subject of the forthcoming Paris Universal Exhibition has been published in your issue of last night, and I am glad to see that it was used in the construction of the large cartoon which appeared on the front page. It is possible to keep up the rain, and that anyone who has been unfortunate enough to be caught in the rain on a rainy night, especially in New York City, will appreciate the value of a waterproof raincoat. The new raincoat is a perfect invention. It is made of a material which is completely waterproof and is also very light and comfortable to wear. It is also very durable and will last for many years. The new raincoat is a great invention and is a must-have for anyone who lives in a rainy climate.
